In this compelling showcase, Caitlin Werner challenges the conventional boundaries of artistic expression through a series of artworks that explore the dynamic interplay between deconstruction and reconstruction. Each piece embodies a profound narrative where frameworks are shattered, revealing the raw essence of creativity. Werner's work exemplifies how every breakage serves as an opportunity for new beginnings and artistic evolution.

Caitlin Werner is a multifaceted artist whose journey is deeply rooted in her diverse roles as a mother, spouse, designer, and academic. With a distinguished educational background including a Master of Design from the University of Illinois Chicago and the Basel School of Art and Design, as well as a Bachelor of Liberal Arts from Purdue University, Werner brings a wealth of knowledge and expertise to her craft. Currently based in Basel, Switzerland, she continues to inspire with her passion for design while balancing a rich family life.

Reflecting on her artistic process, Werner draws inspiration from a quote by Kurt Vonnegut, aiming to create a space where "everything was beautiful and nothing hurt." Her journey, marked by both personal and creative challenges, underscores the resilience and transformative power of art. From her experiences in New York City to a life-altering accident and subsequent recovery journey, Werner's artworks resonate with profound emotional depth and introspection.

In her own words, "This exhibition is a story, not bound by disclosure or sequence, but a testament to the journey of reframing life's challenges. It's about finding light amidst darkness, and healing through the medium of paint."
